

To Director, FCC,

Regarding setting a national standard for No-Call Lists, I feel that any such standards should be MINIMUMS, not maximums. Don't dilute the intent of Indiana's no call list by forcing LOWER standards on the people of this state. Doing so would only demonstrate a lack of concern for the people for whom this state law has been a god-send, allowing Hoosiers to live in a measure of peace, uninterrupted by greedy businessmen whose ONLY concern is not my peace of mind, but lining their pockets! You would think that, when told that by no means would I consider buying anything from someone who callously interrupts my meals, rest or family time, these companies would voluntarily remove my household from their intrusive lists, but not so; the only relief has been Indiana's protection. No amount of self-regulation can be expected from these greedy sales people; please don't presume to "protect" the people of Indiana by diluting the level of protection Indiana ALREADY provides her citizens by imposing lesser standards than we enjoy now. Please, prove yourselves true protectors of the people, not the selfish businesses who would incessantly interfere with my life and that of my family.

Sincerely,
James F Daily
